From the East

Dear Brethren...

This month I want to talk about bringing in new members. Recruiting new members is not a difficult task, if you have the right procedure in place. How can you recruit new members if you don't know where to look?

Potential candidates are located all around you, but you may never know it. Identify men in your community who would meet the qualifications of membership. Having trouble coming up with names? Consider the following:

- Relatives of present or past members;
- Look through the local newspaper for people who recently or will celebrate 25-year wedding anniversaries or even wedding announcements. Both of these events help identify potential "Baby-Boomers" who may find themselves with more time on their hands. These are men who now are looking for exactly what Masonry has to offer - a chance to "give back" to their communities, a sense of belonging, fraternal relations, etc.

- Don't overlook men who have expressed an interest in the past, even those who may have taken their 1st or 2nd Degree(s). Maybe it simply wasn't the right time or perhaps there were other circumstances that prevented them from becoming a Mason.

Remember, simply bringing in a new member won't get the job done. He must be mentored throughout his first year and enrolled in your lodge. Your job isn't finished when you collect the signed petition and initiation fee. Your job isn't finished after the new member has been a Mason for a year. Your job isn't even finished when you have enrolled him in the lodge. Your job is only completed when you have taught the new brother what he needs to know, including what he needs to know to one day take over your responsibilities.

In short, your job isn't finished until you have trained your replacements, and trained them to recruit and train their replacements...

Masonry has a proud heritage; if you want it to have a bright future you must plan and act accordingly.

Masonry isn't just for the here and now, it is for the future. Happy hunting.

So Mote It Be!

Harvey Goldberg

Don't forget, this meeting is our famous Soup Night on Thursday, March 8th!

For our Stated Communication on Thursday March 8, please plan to bring a soup or crock pot dish for this month's dinner. Whatever your specialty. The brethren and guests will then vote on the top three dishes and the two getting the most votes will win tickets to Brotherhood Night on March 23, 2018. If you would like to participate, please contact our Sr. Steward, Tom Sandilands, by phone or email. His contact information is provided below.

Hope to see you all there.
